2019 ANNUAL REPORT

ABOUT DRI

We believe that people are citizens, not subjects. DRI works to build, preserve and defend democracy and its institutions. After all, people make change but democratic and accountable institutions preserve it.

We work with local actors to protect and expand our shared democratic space in this polarised world, regardless of political opinions or personal beliefs.

INTRODUCTION

The last year was marked by widespread protests that swept countries on every continent. From the streets of Beirut and Khartoum to those of Santiago, Hong Kong and Algiers, people took to the streets to demand a stronger say in how they are governed.

As an organisation dedicated to sustaining and promoting democracy, we continued to focus on helping shape and strengthen the institutions that make democracy sustainable. Far from the headlines, the daily work of governance continues and makes real changes in people's lives. The importance of democratically accountable, functional and efficient governments is only further highlighted by the covid-19 pandemic when choices made by policy-makers have an impact on the life and death of their citizens. This situation has also emphasized the importance of local authorities, who are in the frontline of the fight against the coronavirus.

Our approach rests on two key components: reporting and capacity-building. Through our networks of country offices and partners, DRI is in a unique position to report on developments in countries across Asia, Europe, the Middle East and North Africa. We report to make the real-world ramifications of seemingly abstract concepts concrete. We also recommend how to make improvements on the ground.

We could do this thanks to our network of country offices, from monitoring the implementation of Tunisia's constitution to governance solutions to Lebanon's longstanding solid waste problems. We also work closely with local governments and civil society to identify their needs so that they can better serve their citizens and work together to find local solutions to local problems.

The year 2019 kept us busy across the countries where we work. Elections in Sri Lanka, Tunisia and Ukraine led to changes in governments and featured significant social media activity, which we monitored closely. Meanwhile, our team in Myanmar busily laid the groundwork for the 2020 parliamentary elections. We continued our work with local governments and civil society in Libya despite the renewal in fighting that engulfed the country throughout the year, while in Lebanon we worked to increase youth political participation and strengthen municipalities. In Pakistan, we worked with local representatives, officials and civil society to promote human rights awareness. We also renewed our efforts on the rule of law and government accountability in the European Union, driving home the importance of supporting democracy everywhere, as no country is beyond reproach.

HIGHLIGHTS

We are guided by the international framework that enshrines democracy and human rights in international law. Equal rights and fundamental freedoms for all, democratic elections, an independent judiciary, and free media are all essential components of democracy that we pursue. We work on five thematic areas that form essential components of democracy.

OVERVIEW

CONTEXT

In 2019, the country's powerful bureaucracy continued to be strongly influenced by the army and Myanmar's politics were dominated by internal armed conflicts. After the highly problematic military operations against the Rohingya minority in Rakhine state in 2018, the situation remained tense with regular flare-ups of violence and the Northern Shan State saw increased fighting and the displacement of local communities.

Notably, Yangon City held its first ever local government elections under universal suffrage. The Union Election Commission introduced changes to increase transparency in military voting, partially addressing a demand that many international and domestic observers were making.

OUR WORK

DRI supported the advocacy coalition of nine domestic election observers, which announced their five key reform demands ahead of Myanmar's general elections, scheduled for late 2020.

DRI supported a series of trainings for candidates and elected officials in the Yangon City Development Committee to increase the number and improve the capacity of women involved in local politics. The workshops led to the creation of a network of elected officials who regularly exchange on key issues.

In the run-up to the 2020 elections, DRI in Myanmar is focusing on online pluralism and its impact on the offline world by conducting social media monitoring to unveil how hate and violent discourses directed at minorities spread on Facebook.

SRI LANKA

THEMATIC AREAS

OVERVIEW

CONTEXT

Sri Lanka in 2019 was defined by two pivotal events: the 21 April Easter bombings and the November presidential election. The year started with the Prime Minister naming a minority government in January, in the aftermath of the constitutional crisis that engulfed the country at the end of 2018. Following the April attacks in Christian churches, which killed 250 people, the country saw several anti-Muslim riots in May.

The presidential election, held on 16 November resulted in a victory for the Sri Lankan People's Front (SLPP), with Gotabhaya Rajapaksa elected as President of Sri Lanka.

OUR WORK

DRI Sri Lanka set up two civil society networks to monitor human rights violations across the island. We also helped civil society produce two alternative reports on human and labour rights that were submitted to the EU and discussed with EU officials under the GSP+ trade scheme. We held two workshops for Sinhala and Tamil civil society monitoring networks to build their ability to monitor and advocate on GSP+.

We also monitored social media and provided an assessment of the social media landscape in Sri Lanka through an analysis of data on Facebook pages between 1 January to 31 October 2018. Our social media monitoring continued, focusing on the presidential elections and online discourse on important societal issues.

CONTEXT

The government faced important economic challenges throughout the year and 2019 marked a rise in tensions with India over Kashmir when New Delhi revoked the region’s autonomous status.

Decentralisation efforts continued with the introduction of local governance legislation for the provinces of Punjab and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa (KP). This devolution provides an opportunity to strengthen human rights through the new institutions. However, space for civil society continued to shrink as NGOs faced difficulties registering, leading to a sector slowdown and closures.

OUR WORK

DRI Pakistan worked with human rights institutions and parliamentary structures, notably with local authorities in the Punjab and KP provinces. We organised two interprovincial exchange visits of parliamentarians and civil servants in Karachi and Lahore, and created and trained district committees in all 36 of Punjab’s districts.

We addressed the issue of a shrinking space for civil society in a national conference, agreeing on a key set of recommendations and pushing for a consensus law from a government agency.

We developed a four-part video series to engage with the general public, particularly younger people, and raise awareness of GSP+’s potential to boost economic growth along with human and labour rights.

KEY ACTIVITIES AND PUBLICATIONS

Held in Karachi and Lahore, these events brought together 86 individuals, including 63 men and 23 women.

CONTEXT

The Lebanese government announced in January 2019, after nine months of deadlock, to work on reforms amid fears of a major economic collapse. Urgent reforms were needed to decrease the outsized budget deficit and unlock 11 billion dollars in loans.

Mass protests have swept across the country since October, when more tax increases were announced.

Prime Minister Saad Hariri and his government resigned after their proposed reform package was rejected by protesters. Lebanon has since been caught in a political deadlock with unemployment and poverty rising at dramatic rates.

OUR WORK

In 2019, DRI Lebanon focused on decentralisation and citizen participation, promoting evidence-based policies in key areas such as solid waste management. Through specialised workshops and support to parliament, DRI advocated for more inclusive policies related to community participation and transparency in planning and implementing public services.

DRI promoted a unique model of youth engagement by supporting the election of a regional Youth Council.

The Council is set to monitor the work of local government and influence policymaking to meet the needs of young people.

We also advocated for sustainable local government as the backbone of good governance. We looked into how public-private partnerships and fiscal decentralisation reform can make local government more effective.

KEY ACTIVITIES AND PUBLICATIONS

Support to the Lebanese parliament on decentralisation and municipal law reform, June to December 2019

DRI provided technical expertise on a series of legal amendments to restore the autonomy of local authorities, improve representativity and promote gender equality.

CONTEXT

A planned referendum on the 2017 draft constitution did not take place in January 2019, while elections in dozens of municipalities helped create a sense of democratic accountability between March and April.

Fighting broke out around Tripoli in April and continued until the end of the year as multiple countries intervened to support either the forces of General

Haftar’s Libyan National Army or the UN-backed Government of National Accord, in violation of the UN arms embargo. Germany announced it would attempt to mediate as violence intensified. Many Libyan citizens remained hostage to local, regional, and international politics, but maintained their aspiration to democratic institutions.

OUR WORK

We worked closely with 30 partners across the country on issues ranging from political participation, particularly empowering women and youth to contribute to local decision-making, the constitutional process and the role of ethnic groups in it, the rights of people with disabilities, local elections, and local governance.

Moreover, DRI has been monitoring Libyan social media since December 2018, examining discourse on the constitution, elections, the UN roadmap, UNSMIL and security issues related to the transformation.

DRI Libya implemented a project on strengthening the involvement of citizens and activists in the political transition. DRI has also begun working with municipalities to improve public services.

TUNISIA

OVERVIEW

CONTEXT

Presidential and parliamentary elections took place during Autumn 2019, shifting Tunisia's political landscape as Kais Saied, a conservative academic outsider, won the presidency with over 72% of the vote while none of the political parties or alliances came out as a clear winner of the parliamentary elections. By the end of 2019, there was still no new government.

The decentralisation process, launched in 2018, moved slowly, as did the implementation of the 2014 constitution. Municipalities are still struggling to adjust to their new role, with insufficient support and accompaniment, as demonstrated by the resignations of many mayors and councils.

OUR WORK

DRI Tunisia supported decentralisation processes, accountability and information flow of institutions. Local democracy assessments in Ariana and El Hencha with citizens and municipal officials will lead to increased support for local civil society initiatives and assisting municipal councils in developing more participatory democracy. Through its Young Leaders project, DRI supported 23 youth from several disadvantaged regions to participate in the decentralisation process.

DRI monitored Facebook before and during the election campaign, focusing on coordinated attempts to manipulate or polarise opinion. Our findings show that, although no major manipulation attempt was detected, Facebook was used by some actors to circumvent electoral law, and that the company had made no attempt to enforce Tunisian electoral regulations.

CONTEXT

Presidential and parliamentary elections transformed Ukraine's political landscape in 2019. Volodymyr Zelensky, a 41-year-old outsider, secured 73% of votes and his "Servant of the People" party was the first to achieve an absolute parliamentary majority since independence. With this majority in parliament, the government began an intense reform process, launching myriad initiatives to transform the country, often without the necessary time for public discussion. This included the introduction of a new electoral code in December 2019.

The conflict in Eastern Ukraine continued, although diplomatic efforts were revived under the Normandy format, which brought together Ukraine, Russia, France, and Germany to talks in December. The parties recommitted to an existing ceasefire, troop withdrawals, demining efforts, and a new prisoner exchange that was carried out on 29 December.

DRI Ukraine continued to focus on promoting youth political participation across the country, organising workshops and strengthening young people's political skills to support a new generation of leaders.

Georgian politics remained highly polarised in 2019. This was fuelled by the two main political parties, as they geared up for elections scheduled for autumn 2020. Popular protests demanding a fully proportional election system took place in June, restarting in November after the governing party scraped the reform.

OUR WORK

We continued raising awareness on the consequences of extreme political polarisation with our partners, the Georgian Young Lawyers Association (GYLA) and ForSet. We worked with media, civil society and activists to create tools and media products to popularise the issue. The project reached more than 100,000 people through project activities, publications and social media campaigns, engaging directly with more than 200 people.

CONTEXT

Elections to the European Parliament, the appointment of a new European Commission and important European Court of Justice rulings all marked 2019.

We work to strengthen democracy across many countries, including in the European Union. The state of democracy and the rule of law have become heated topics across the EU in recent years, with the influence of online discourse on elections and the dismantling of judicial independence in certain states at the top of the agenda.

OUR WORK

The rule of law has emerged from a relatively technical concept to the front pages of media. However, very few people can identify what is meant by the rule of law. It is to help bridge this gap that DRI began work on re:constitution – research and analysis on democracy and the rule of law, a programme implemented with the Berlin-based Forum Transregionale Studien.

This programme promotes better public debate on the rule of law through academic research, led by FTS, and through timely explanations and analysis of rule of law developments led by DRI. We work closely with journalists, officials, and researchers to explain the complex mechanisms that govern the rule of law in the EU and the latest developments in a non-partisan manner.

This is accomplished through publications and briefings designed to break down and explain breaking events such as decisions made by the European Court of Justice or providing overviews of rule of law developments in countries ahead of crucial elections. You can find all our analysis and publications at www.reconstitution.eu.

In 2019, we continued our conversation with conservative parties and opinion-makers, exploring and debating discontent with democracy. When it comes to monitoring social media, we partnered with the Slovak NGO MEMO 98 to help civil society organisations better do this work. We supported organisations in Austria, Portugal, Croatia, Spain, Poland and Romania to monitor social media around their 2019 elections, based on our methodology.

Democratic Republic of Congo

DRI continued supporting a network of eleven Congolese citizen election observation groups, the Synergie des missions d'observation citoyenne des élections (SYMOCEL), as part of our EU-funded partnership with the Electoral Institute for Sustainable Democracy in Africa (EISA). We helped strengthen SYMOCEL's advocacy efforts and build the network as a self-standing entity. We accompanied SYMOCEL in their successful observation of the December 2018 general elections, the 2019 senate and gubernatorial elections, and the polls that had been postponed in locations affected by conflict and the Ebola outbreak.

DRI also continued its DFID-funded partnership with the Westminster Foundation for Democracy and EISA to audit newly introduced and much-debated electronic voting machines, and advise domestic observers on how to discuss lessons learnt from the elections and formulate policy changes.

Supporting Democracy: A Citizen Organisations Programme

DRI continued to test new democracy and governance approaches with its consortium partners Sofreco and the National Democratic Institute under the EU-funded Supporting Democracy project. We continued initiatives to put civic tech initiatives higher on the EU's global democracy support agenda. We promoted social media monitoring at conferences and workshops in Thailand, Malaysia and Lebanon and continued our leadership of a working group with worldwide partners to develop a credible methodology for monitoring political discourse on social media. The programme ended in October 2019.

Nigeria

DRI continued its DFID-funded project, implemented with Stakeholder Democracy Nigeria and Armed Conflict Location & Event Data Project (ACLED), to accompany domestic election observers in the Niger Delta during the presidential and National Assembly polls in February and the Governorship and State House of Assembly elections in March.

Citizen election observers from Niger Delta Watch 2019 submitted nearly 700 incident reports between November 2018 and April 2019, identifying violence against voters and election committee staff, threats, hostile rhetoric, and intimidation as well as tactics to confuse voters online as the key issues of the 2019 Nigerian elections.

CSO Roadmaps

DRI continued to partner with the consortium led by EPRD Poland and comprising CIDEAL, the Coalition Factory and the ECNL to provide strategic support and guidance to EU Delegation staff in the process of developing, implementing and monitoring the first generation of "EU country roadmaps for engagement with civil society organizations".

Lot 3 - Human Rights, Democracy and Peace

DRI continued its engagement under an EU Framework Contract (Lot 3 - Human Rights, Democracy and Peace) under the lead of ARS Progetti, particularly through a long-term mission to support the EU Delegation in Myanmar to roll out a strategy of strengthening citizen groups.

SOCIAL MEDIA MONITORING

THEMATIC AREAS

OVERVIEW

CONTEXT

Social media lowers the barrier for participation in public debate and political action. It can contribute to a more inclusive debate, but it can also be abused to polarise society through disinformation and hate speech, using paid advertising or inauthentic accounts to push narratives in a manipulative fashion.

Past uses of social media to manipulate voters' perceptions are indicators of the harm that the unregulated use of technology can cause in society. The fast pace with which technology advances and the new tactics call for more analysis on how such tools are impacting democracies. An evidence-based and inclusive understanding of the threats and vulnerabilities should be the basis of effective legislation to counter such threats in the future.

OUR WORK

We have been strengthening the abilities of local partners to monitor social media during elections, creating evidence in different countries, gathering expert organisations, producing methodologies, and facilitating discussions and exchanges to inform policy-making.

We also conducted social media monitoring of political events in most countries where DRI works, notably Libya, Myanmar, Pakistan, Tunisia, Sri Lanka, the European Union and Ukraine.

PROMOTING HUMAN AND LABOUR RIGHTS THROUGH GSP+

CONTEXT

The GSP+ scheme allows eligible developing countries to pay no duties on a wide range of exports to the European Union in exchange for adhering to 27 international conventions regarding human and labour rights, good governance, and the environment.

With the scheme’s mixed economic impact across many of the beneficiary countries, as well as competing markets with less stringent barriers to entry, GSP+ faces some challenges when being leveraged by civil society as a tool to promote human and labour rights.

OUR WORK

In 2019 our partners and country offices worked in the eight GSP+ countries.

In Kyrgyzstan, the Coalition for Democracy and Civil Society conducted a nationwide survey to gauge public awareness of GSP+ and the conventions. In Pakistan, DRI developed a four-part video series to engage with the public, particularly younger people, and raise awareness of the potential of GSP+. In the Philippines, the Philippine Alliance of Human Rights Advocates (PAHRA) held town hall meetings across the country with workers, trade union officials and labour activists.

In Sri Lanka, DRI continued to develop the grassroots network of human rights activists and advocates which it had begun in 2018. In Armenia, the Eurasia Partnership Foundation (EPF) supported local NGOs to produce reports on human and labour rights issues affecting different parts of the country. It completed its activities in October 2019.

Our partner in Bolivia, the Centro de Estudios para el Desarrollo Laboral y Agrario (CEDLA), launched a case study in July on issues of labour and human rights in the sector of Amazon (or Brazil) nuts, one of Bolivia’s main GSP+ exports. In Cabo Verde, the National Commission for Human Rights and Citizenship (CNDHC) mounted a nation-wide human rights education campaign which was also supported by the United Nations.

In Mongolia, project implementation was concluded in May 2019. The Globe International Center (GIC) worked with the Mongolian Bar Association and the Media Council of Mongolia on issues related to the safety of journalists, freedom of expression and the right to information. In Paraguay, the Centro de Análisis y Difusión de la Economía Paraguaya (CADEP) produced several studies throughout the year on topics related to trade and human rights, completing its activities in December 2019.
